United States on Threshhold of New and Attractive War Loan. Spring Activities Inevitable.

New York, March 18 .- Henry Clews in als weekly financial letter says: "That transactions in stock exchange securities should be confined to limited proportions does not appear remarkable if analysis is frankly attempted of the conditions under which they are being conducted. We are, for instance, at the threshold of a new war loan, larger in volume, it is understood, and more attractive in return than either of the offerings which have preceded it. At the same time we every day are approaching on the western war front the active resumption on a major scale of hostilities which, with the arrival of spring, are so inevitable. It has therefore been emphasized in these advices that the renewal of active fighting this year contains for us a much greater personal element. Our own men are for the first time to under-take a liberal share of the burden of the war. Every day the new arrivals of our troops in France will add to American

"As to the ultimate duration of the struggle, the week's developments con-tain little which seems to suggest that the end has approached appreciably nearer. No doubt the enemy, if it were possible for him to consolidate and per-petuate the fruits of the invasion of a demoralized Russia, would be more than willing to advance such terms for resti-tution of Beigian and French territory meet much more clearly the demands of our own country and of our associates in the war. The Germanizing of the great Russian empire, the control those which have been developed and those not-would provide an outlet for German expansion undoubtedly far be-yond any hope entertained before the war began. But such a settlement of the war is not possible. At best it would mean merely a temporary truce with a determination of the military caste of Berlin, after once the Russian situation had been placed under control, to resume and continue its plan of world conquest which has been so unmistakably dis-played as the underlying object of the present war. President Wilson in his message to the Russian soviet at Moscow has, however, intimated the American position on the Russian preblem, which problem must be considered but a separate-division of a single great question. The only possible basis for peace which can be considered is one which will mean a permanent peace predicated upon the overthrow of antocracy and the safe-guarding of democratic ideas of freedom of thought and action. "It merely is axiomatic that the longer the duration of the war the greater its cost and the greater the addition to our huge national debt which is so rapidly piling up. The money situation already has developed a degree of strain which calls for caution in stock exchange oper-ations. At the moment the market is being called upon to depend almost entirely upon money accommodation af-forded in the form of demand loans. Funds for fixed maturities are not avail-

"Secretary McAdoo has very frankly recognized the financial patriotism of New York, which has been displayed by large subscriptions to the treasury certificates of indebtedness that are being issued in anticipation of subscriptions to the new loan. But, admittedly, the underlying monetary situation cannot be expected to develop distinct case during the period necessary for the accumulation of funds so urgently required by our government.

"From the general investment standpoint there appears no reason to change views recently expressed in these ad-On the one hand must be recognized the competition for the savings of investors which will accompany the offering next month of the new war bond Undoubtedly the utmost pressure will be exerted to make the new offering an outstanding success. The bonds themselves will be attractive and will, in addition, have behind them the spur of patriotism to make effective demands upon the floating supply of funds available for "Lung-Vita was recommended to me and I began taking it. When I started on this medicine I was so bad off that I had to sit up in bed to get my breath and I could hardly walk at all. I was also very nervous and subject to frequent headaches and sometimes could hardly stand. But now I can walk all day and I think it remarkable for I have taken only one bottle of Lung-vita. Because this medicine has cured me I recommend it to all persons who suffer in this way.

WORKER'S BEHIND LINES AT HOME IN GAME, TOO

Vice-Admiral Sims Declares Not All Glory Belongs to Army and Navy.

(By David Lawrence.) (Copyright, 1918, by New York Even-ing Post Co.) Washington, March 18.—Wars are not fought merely by spectacular feats on land and sea, but by the men and women back of the line whose work women back of the line whose work may seem mere drudgery. Vice-Admiral Sims, commanding the American naval forces now operating in European waters, has sent to the paymaster-general of the navy, Rear-Admiral McGowan, a letter which illustrates that point. It was apropos of a talk by a naval officer to the employes of the bureau of supplies and accounts describing conditions in the war zone and the meaning of the war.

"It is an excellent scheme," wrote "It is an excellent scheme," wrote Admiral Sims, "to get the main points out and circulate them in a form that the people can see. This should be done extensively in all departments, as there is more or less universal feeling that where drudgery work has to be done the people doing it are not in the game. "They are very distinctly in the game; and if each would speed up and do his best, it would have a material effect upon hastening the end of this distressing war."

The paymaster-general promptly had the above letter printed and distributed throughout his bureau in the navy department, and accompanied it with this comment:

"It will naturally please you all, your work and appreciates it, for if anybody can get a correct perspective of this whole thing, he ought to be able to do so."
All Are "In the Game."

The national capital is now full of workers, thousands of whom look upon their work as mere drudgery. While many of the tasks are interesting, there are many that are truly monot-onous and nerve-racking. What Ad-miral Sims advises is in effect that the employes of all the bureaus and departments be told about the war, either by printed information or by such talks as occur in the bureau of supplies and accounts. There are many four-minute men traveling about the country exhorting the people to co-operation with the government, but thus far there has been no systematic effort to make the government employes feel that they were "distinctly in the game." though the signal corps has found it helpful to have frequent addresses to the workmen at the fac-tories and plants where aeroplanes

Many people now engaged in war service are doing tasks of drudgery, and what Admiral Sims says of the rank and file of the navy department applies to those who are similarly employed in the work of food and fuel and the mobilization of commodities necessary to the war machine. All these folk behind the lines—at home—are distinctly "in the game."

KAISER SENDS MESSAGE TO MERCANTILE EMPLOYES

London, Friday, March 15 .- Em peror William, replying to a message of homage from the national congress of mercantile employes of Germany, telegraphed:

"Prussia and the empire created by close co-operation between prince and people and by inter-action of the monarchial and national idea which is peculiar to us Germans. Upon it rests our future. From it we draw strength for the struggles which are ahead and for the great economic and social works which we shall have to fulfill in an altered work.
"I confidently hope the wonderful achievements of all classes of the nation will be crowned by such a peace as the German classes need for the continued healthy development. God give us His aid."

TRENCH FEVER ORIGIN PERHAPS DETERMINED

Strauss, Presbyterian Hospital Unit, Submits to Innoculation. Experiment Successful.

New York, March 18 .- Details of the successful experiments conducted in France to determine the origin of trench fever were contained in a let-ter from Benjamin Strauss, a mem-ber of the Presbyterian hospital unit, who voluntarily submitted to inocu-lation with the fever germs, made public here last night by the young man's parents, who amounced that his cure had been pronounced com-plete. The experiment was under-taken to test the theory that trench fever was contracted through contact with the "chat," or trench louse.

Strauss wrote that during the incoulation period "chats," which had been in contact with patients known to be suffering from trench fever, were allowed to remain on his forearm for twenty minutes daily for a period of four weeks. At the end of that time, he said, his temperature rose to 100 degrees and he exhibited other symptoms of trench fever. It is believed by the medical authorities that the experiment has shown a
